Introduction

The present study may be considered only as a preliminary elaboration. The writer is fully aware that the catalogue of incunabula-works written by Carthusian monks is certainly incomplete and requires further research. Compared to the other main fields of Carthusian studies nowadays, the interest for incunabula seems to have been somewhat neglected or, at least, less developed. This observation applies to Polish historiography as well. However, among 150 most precious and valuable incunabula preserved in Polish libraries before WW II, as many as seven incunabula of Carthusian authors were displayed during the national exhibition at Cracow in 1935<sup>1</sup>. The outbreak of the war interrupted the studies that had been undertaken and as a consequence of Nazi-Soviet occupation many libraries (e.g. the entire Biblioteka Załuskich in Warsaw) were totally destroyed. One can observe the revival of these studies in Poland at the present time<sup>2</sup>.

Further studies on Carthusian incunabula should be pursued in two different fields: first – to recreate the full list of incunabula editions of Carthusian authors; second – to recreate the incunabula collections once preserved in the charterhouse libraries. Both of these projects will require years of research before they can be completed ....

The Carthusians and the Print Revolution.

1. Introduction

Since the very beginning of the Carthusian Order, the silent monks were known for their love and care of books. Guigo I, fifth prior of the Grande Chartreuse, in chapter 28 of his Consuetudines Cartusiae, described precisely what kind of instruments and utensils, necessary to transcribe manuscripts, each monk should have in his cell. In a comparatively short time, the first Carthusian monks gathered large collections of manuscripts that caught the attention of visitors to the Grande Chartreuse, e.g. Guibert de Nogent and Peter the Venerable<sup>3</sup>. One of the most significant features of Carthusian spirituality in the Middle Ages was certainly transcribing and copying manuscripts. Praedicare manibus instead of active preaching in churches for the laity became the specific Carthusian cura animarum<sup>4</sup>.

The situation changed slightly in the mid 13th century, however. Till that time, all Carthusian monasteries were located in distant valleys or remote places and access to them was often difficult. The foundation of the charterhouse of Vauvert near Paris can be considered as a symbolic turning point in the history of the Carthusian Order and consequently in that of their libraries. From that time, Carthusian monks attracted the wealthy nobility, the aristocracy, members of royal families as well as townsmen, as benefactors. Many of their monasteries began to founded in close vicinity to urban centres<sup>5</sup>. Hubert Jedin described this development as a "Copernican change"<sup>6</sup>. The economical, cultural, political as well as religious aspects of this "Copernican shift" have already been discussed by many scholars, but the most important issue involved manuscripts and books.

The Carthusians were by no means unresponsive to certain contemporary debates in the 14th and 15th centuries, in particular as regards church affairs. Denys the Carthusian left his monastery, accompanying Nicolaus Cusanus on his reform legation through the Netherlands and Germany, as well as compiling various kinds of treatises (manuals) on nearly every conceivable topic of interest to lay or religious audiences (soldiers, the aristocracy, widows, parish priests, etc.). Largely self-taught, backed-up, however, by certain university experiences, Denys was trying to apply the scholastic theology of the Cologne Thomists and Albertists to the Carthusian mystical tradition. This attitude was more appropriate for the urban, early humanist, well-endowed, relatively open-to-the-world charterhouses at Basel, Erfurt, Nürnberg, Paris and elsewhere<sup>7</sup>.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Erich Kleineidam, Die theologische Richtung der Erfurter Kartäuser am Ende des 15. Jahrhunderts, Miscellanea Erfordiana, 1962, p. 247-271; P.J. Gumbert, Die Utrechter Kartäuser und ihre Bücher im frühen fünfzehnten Jahrhundert, 1974, p. 308-312.

According to the records kept by two librarians Georg Carpentarius (d. 1531) and Ludwig Mosel (d. 1510) of the Basel charterhouse, the monks regularly loaned their books to non-Carthusian readers. Between 1482 to 1528 approximately five hundred books were lent out. However, besides the increasing interest for Carthusian-owned books, one can notice another change, I would call it a "semi-Copernican change", - declining interest for copying books.

One of the most important sources for studies on monastic life are necrologies and chronicles, compiled in various forms. One can observe, while researching the Carthusian necrologies and chronicles from the second half of the 15th century, that the frequency of the annotations "scriptor", "scriba", "bonus scriptor", "scriptor magnus", "scriptor egregius", added usually to monks' names, has significantly declined as compared with preceding epochs. This can be very clearly observed in the case of Dutch and German necrologies. One of the best examples is furnished by notes from the charterhouse in Liège. On 19 September 1397 the death in this monastery of Richoldus de Clèves is recorded, "qui multum scripsit pro domo", similarly on 6 January 1398 Henry de Wesel died, "qui multa et utilia scripsit pro domo". One can consider this kind of note as typical for Carthusian professed monks. However, only three monks, who died in the second half of the 15th century, were called "scriptor" without any further comment, such as magnus, bonus, egregius, etc. The last monk recorded as a scribe, Daniel d'Audenarde, died on 10 January 1492<sup>8</sup>. Why did the Carthusians became less interested in transcribing manuscripts, less fervent in their love for books or care of them?

2. The Carthusians and early printers

A popular method to promote Christian spirituality - before the invention of the printing press - was by using a xylograph. The majority of them presented images of saints, which people usually hung in their homes. One of the oldest preserved xylographs is the image of St. Christopher that once belonged to the Carthusians of Buxheim and dated from 1423<sup>9</sup>. In the thirties of the 15th century the first xylograph booklets (Blockbücher) were produced. They consisted of several pages, mainly pictures, but with several lines of text. Because of serious difficulties in producing this kind of booklet, the number of titles was quite limited, consisting mainly of popular devotional literature, such as apocalyptic work, the Biblia pauperum, treatises on the ars moriendi<sup>10</sup>, and the speculum humanae salvationis<sup>11</sup>.

The real revolution in printing technology was certainly connected with the invention of the printing press by Johann Gutenberg<sup>12</sup>. His work was not welcomed with acclaim by everyone. Various opinions were expressed by members of the clergy on the importance of this new art, some of them very critical. The most significant work produced by the Johann Gutenberg press was the Bible, but he also published several less known pieces, such as calendars, the anti-Turkish bull of Pope Calixtus III or Cisianus. As a consequence of a legal process, Gutenberg's workshop was taken over by his co-workers Johann Fust and Peter Schöffer, who continued printing activities in Mainz. There is no evidence of any close relations between Carthusians and the very first generation of printers (Johann Gutenberg, Johann Fust, Peter Schöffer, Johann Mentelin). However, Werner Rolewinck in his fascinating work Fasciculus temporum noted under the year 1457: artifices mira celeritate subtiliores solito fiunt et impressores librorum multiplicantur in terra<sup>13</sup>. The observation of Rolewinck seems to be exact, for by 1500 one can count ca. 1500 printing presses across Europe. Ludwig Hain in his Repertorium collected 16,200 entries of incunabula. In the second half of the fifteenth century in Venice alone as many as 150 printing presses were established. Analyzing the contents and character of the printed books between 1450-1525, one can say that ca. 75% treated religious topics. In this same period of time 156 full editions of the Bible in Latin and 22 in German came out. As many as 60 editions of Thomas à Kempis De Imitatione Christi were offered to pious readers up to 1525. The Carthusians participated in this development with conspicuous success<sup>14</sup>.

For various social and religious reasons the early seventies of the fifteenth century marked the turning point, for the Carthusians accepted the new art and agreed to publish their own treatises, which had been popular in manuscript form.

2.1. Arnold ter Hoernen

The Carthusians from the charterhouse Domus S. Barbarae in Cologne successfully established close relations with the local printer Arnold ter Hoernen and soon their monastery became the most important centre for the further development of the Carthusians' interest in the printing art. In 1471 ter Hoernen printed the Sermo de praesentatione beatissimae Marie semper virginis by Werner Rolewinck and De remediis utriusque fortunae prosperae et adversae by Adrian the Carthusian. Around 1472 he published De sacramento altaris et missae celebratione by Denys the Carthusian and Meditationes de vita Christi by Ludolf of Saxony. Some years later, in 1475, he printed Liber de laude antiquae Saxoniae nunc Westphaliae dictae also by Werner Rolewinck<sup>15</sup>.

There is no doubt that the most popular incunabula by a Carthusian author, maybe even the most frequently reprinted incunabula, has been the Fasciculus temporum of Werner Rolewinck, professed-monk of Cologne charterhouse, edited first by Arnold ter Hoernen<sup>16</sup>. The printer's colophon declared: impressa est hec cronica que dicitur fasciculus temporum colonie agrippie sicut ab autore suo quodam deuote carthusiensi colonie edita est. Ac secundum primum exemplar quod ipse venerabilis autor propriis conscripsit manibus ad sinem vsque deducta per me arnoldum ther huernen. Sub annis domini m.cccc.lxxiii. De quo sit deus benedictus in secula Amen<sup>17</sup>. Rolewinck himself prepared a copy of his work for the purpose of the printing; however, it was not listed by R.B. Marks in his catalogue of medieval manuscripts, though some other manuscripts by Rolewinck are included in R.B. Marks' list<sup>18</sup>.

2.2. Günther Zainer

It was Günther Zainer<sup>19</sup> who established the first printing press in Augsburg and also became one of the most famous printers in this town. He may have learnt the new art in Strasbourg at Johann Mentelin's workshop, but it is also probable that he gained some experience at Johann Fust's or Peter Schöffer's workshops. The oldest preserved and dated book produced by Zainer in Augsburg was published in March 1468. He was active as a printer only for ten years and died on 1st October, 1478. To date at least 80 books from Zainer's press are known to us. In 1474 he offered several books to the Buxheim Carthusians and his name was inscribed in the Liber benefactorum under the date 2 April 1478<sup>20</sup>: D. Guntherus, impressor civis Augustae, dedit nobis libros infra scriptos propter Deum et animae suae salutem anno Domini 1474 et sequentibus, primo pantheologiam in duobus voluminibus<sup>21</sup>, summas Joannis<sup>22</sup>, catenam auream s. Thomae<sup>23</sup>, Biblia in vulgari insuper regali modo<sup>24</sup>, registrum b. Gregorii, insuper Wilhelmum de fide et legibus dupliciter<sup>25</sup>, Postillam super epistolas et evangelia in vulgari<sup>26</sup>, postillam super evangelia Guillelmi<sup>27</sup>, speculum humanae vitae in vulgari<sup>28</sup>, Stephanum de Flisco dupliciter, libellum de terra sancta in vulgari<sup>29</sup>, summam Pisani, libellum de legibus temporalibus in vulgari<sup>30</sup>, titulos psalorum cum expositione, textum Donati, lumen animae in latino<sup>31</sup>, item historiam Barrlam et Josaphat et duo confessionalia in vulgari. Thus in one day the Carthusians obtained volumes that would have taken them years to transcribe.

2.3. Peter Drach

Peter Drach was one of the first and most famous printers in Speyer<sup>32</sup>. He founded his own printing press as late as 1476, when his first dated book came out. Soon he was aided by his son, also Peter, who, in 1481, became the co-owner of the family business. After having faced certain hardships, he moved his press to Worms, where he edited a Latin-German Psalter in 1504. After his death his son ran the printing press in Worms until 1528. Peter Drach the Elder had visited the Carthusian community in Erfurt, where he was looking for the original manuscripts of Jacob de Paradiso<sup>33</sup>. He borrowed some copies of his works and left a signed statement listing the volumes: Ich Peter Drach der jung bochrucker zu Spir beken mit myner handgeschrifft, das mir heben geluwen die hern zu den Cartuser in Erfort sermones Jacobi Cartusiani de tempore und de san[c]tis. Darfor heben sy zu pfant De tempore Jacobi gedruckt und De 4 virtutibus cardinalibus, und obe den hern schade gesche zu irem buch, das versprech ich mich en wider zu kern<sup>34</sup>. In fact, Peter Drach printed ca. 1477 the Sermones dominicales of Jacob de Paradiso. He is also responsible for editing Werner Rolewinck's Fasciculus temporum. The work on this edition was completed on 24 November 1477. A decade later Drach printed two further works by Carthusian authors. In 1489 he published

His spiritual letters were addressed to the students of Prague university, whose everyday life was rather different from that in religious houses. Two years later, in 1491, he printed the Expositio in Psalterium of Ludolf of Saxony, together with Francisco Petrarca's Psalmi poenitentiales. Peter Drach also published the Missale Cartusiense in Speyer before 1496.

2.4. Heinrich Eggstein (Eggenstein)

Strasbourg was one of the largest, richest and most important towns within the German Reich<sup>36</sup>, and also one of the centres of the art of printing<sup>37</sup>, and later on of the Protestant Reformation<sup>38</sup>. The first printer who was active in in Strasbourg 1460-1478 was Johann Mentelin, who printed the Bible in German. He also initiated the distribution of publication announcements. Another famous Strasbourg printer, Adolf Rusch, utilised Venetian-styled antique characters in the German-speaking area for the first time. Most probably Heinrich Eggstein of Rosheim (ca. 1415-† after 1488) learnt the new art at Mentelin's workshop<sup>39</sup>. He established his first printing press in 1464 and published a letter of protection, issued by Friedrich I of Pfalz. In the years that followed he produced, among other items, a Latin Bible, Decretum Gratiani, Decretales of Pope Gregory IX, Constitutiones of Pope Clement V, Liber sextus of Pope Boniface VIII, Cicero's De officiis, Jacob of Voragine's Legenda aurea, Bede's Historia ecclesiastica gentis Anglorum, as well as Eusebius' Historia ecclesiastica. One can also observe the close relations between the Carthusian community in Strasbourg and Heinrich Eggstein. Supported directly by the Carthusians, he printed the Vita Christi of Ludolf of Saxony in 1474; two years before, ca. 1472, he had published Adrian the Carthusian's De remediis utriusque fortunae prosperae et adversae.

2.5. Johann Amerbach

The library of the Basel charterhouse was one of the largest and richest of the Carthusians and even among other monastic communities in the Rhineland. Compared with other German cities at this time, Basel was as large as Nürnberg and Strasbourg. Basel, as a free imperial city, stood in the same category with other episcopal and archiepiscopal sees such as Regensburg, Worms, Speyer, Mainz and Cologne<sup>40</sup>. From the very beginning Basel was also a centre for the new art of printing<sup>41</sup>. Obviously, local printers sought the opportunity to loan books from the charterhouse collection. According to records kept by Georg Carpentarius (d. 1531) and Ludwig Moser (d. 1510), among the borrowers were the printers Johann Amerbach and Hieronymus Froben<sup>42</sup>.

In many ways, the Basel Carthusians were the spiritual advisers of the famous printer Johann Amerbach (ca. 1440-† 25.XII.1513)<sup>43</sup>. He studied at the university in Paris, where he acquired the title magister artium. He met at that time Johann de Lapide (Heynlin), a famous professor and supporter of the printing press at the Sorbonne<sup>44</sup>, who eventually became a Carthusian monk in Basel. Later Amerbach moved to Rome and worked temporarily in Venice. Finally he established his own printing press in Basel in 1478 and printed his first book as Johann de Amerbach. Some years later he bought a house (Haus zum Kaiserstuhl) in Small-Basel (Kleinbasel), not so far from the charterhouse, which became the seat of his workshop. Amerbach, supported by Jakob von Pforzheim, Johann Froben (from 1500 onwards) and Johann Petri (from 1503 onwards), developed one of the most famous presses in Europe. After Johann's death his son, Basilius, continued to run the printing press for several years.

Among the most significant sources for the study of the relations between the Carthusians and early printers, the correspondence of Johann Amerbach is of capital importance<sup>45</sup>. Johann Rot, a Carthusian monk from the charterhouse in Strasbourg, in the name of his prior, Johann Hochberg (1492-1501), thanked Amerbach in his letter dated 30 May 1492 for copies of books printed by Amerbach, sent to the Carthusians. Soon Amerbach finished printing the collected works of St. Ambrose and sent the volumes to the Carthusians in Strasbourg as well<sup>46</sup>. Similar information can be found in a letter to Amerbach from a Carthusian monk of the charterhouse in Cologne (1494)<sup>47</sup>. Johann Heynlin, sometime professor at the university of Paris and later a Carthusian monk in the charterhouse in Basel, discussed with Amerbach certain questions regarding the edition of Johann Trithemius' De scriptoribus ecclesiasticis (1494)<sup>48</sup>. Amerbach exchanged several letters with another Carthusian whose works were published in Basel and Augsburg - Ludwig Moser<sup>49</sup>. Moser was recorded as a city scribe in Zurich in 1460; his name is also found in the foundation charter of the university of Basel<sup>50</sup>. He entered the Basel charterhouse and paid himself for his cell. He held the office of prior in Ittingen 1482-1486, but returned to Basel, where he lived until his death on 16 July 1510. Georg Carperarius described him in his chronicle as "virum non contemnendae litteraturae religiositatisque et e latino in Germanum idioma

The edition of the Carthusian statutes in 1510, prepared by Amerbach with the cooperation with Gregor Reisch, prior of the charterhouse in Freiburg, has been admired by experts over the centuries.

The close relations with the Carthusians were reflected also in Johann Amerbach's testament, dated 13 December 1513, where he stated: "*Et quandocumque me (deo optime sic disponente) vitam cum morte mutare contingat, corpus meum in conuentu diue Margarete virginis et martiris ordinis Carthusiensis in supradicta ciuitate sito apud Barbaram quondam dum viueret meam legitimam vxorem reponi atque tumulari desidero. Later in his will he continued: "Item septimo volo et ordino, quoniam tabula ex ligno sculpta et super altare apud sepulcrum supradictae Barbare quondam mee vxoris in predicto conuentu patrum Carthusiensium posita atque locata nondum depicta seu fulcita est (vt bene decet), igitur illam quam citius et eo modo melius pulcrius, formosius ac dignius, quod id fieri potest, depingi, ornari et fulciri atque perfici et compleri equalibus portionibus, sumptibus et expensis dictorum quattuor meorum heredum (id est trium filiorum et eciam filie) dispono et absque aliqua contradictione sic fieri volo et mando". Among the witnesses of his last will one can find Hieronimus Zscheckenburlin, prior of the Basel charterhouse<sup>52</sup>.

However, the further development of the charterhouse in Basel was interrupted by the Protestant Reformation. The Catholic clergy in the town became a minority (compared to the Protestants). According to a contemporary estimate (ca. 1525) one could include in the Protestant group the following clergy: eight canons in the collegiate chapter of St. Leonard, five monks of the charterhouse, two monks in the Benedictine abbey of St. Alban<sup>53</sup>, 13 canons and 12 chaplains who served at the Cathedral chapter and some larger communities of the Franciscans and Dominicans<sup>54</sup>. The Carthusian library, an important centre for manuscript copying and printing, was

2.6. Stanislaus Polonus

The history of print in Spain is inseparably connected with Stanislaus Polonus<sup>56</sup>. Trained in the art of printing at Naples by Mathias of Moravia, he moved to Seville together with Meinard Ungut, being invited by the Spanish royal family. They established a printing press and edited in 1491 their first work, Defensiones Sancti Thomae by Diego de Deza. Seville was one of the most important cities within the reunited kingdom of Spain, especially after the discovery of the New World. After Ungut's death in 1499 Stanislaus continued to run the press; however in 1502 he moved to Alcalá de Henares near Madrid. After two years he returned to Seville, where he continued printing until 1514.

It seems that the first incunabula of a Carthusian author printed by him was El laberinto del Duque de Cádiz don Rodrigo Ponce de León (Seville 1493), by Juan de Padilla (1468-1510). Soon he printed Gaspar Gorricio de Novaria's Contemplaciones sobre el rosario. Con la forma de la institution del psalterio (...) tornadas en vulgar castellano por Juan Alfonso de Logroño, published in Seville in 1495. Two years later Stanislaus printed the second edition of this book<sup>57</sup>. Gorricio de Novaria held the office of prior in the charterhouse of Santa Maria de las Cuevas in Seville and was a friend of Cristobal Colon. The edition of 1495 was illustrated with two big woodcuts presenting the rosary devotion and fifteen smaller ones dedicated to Our Lady and Jesus in his infancy. This collection is one of the most famous and beautiful that one can find in all the books printed by Meinard Ungut and Stanislaus Polonus<sup>58</sup>. However, the masterpiece produced by their printing press was certainly the edition of Spanish translation of the Vita Christi of Ludolf of Saxony (ca. 1295-1377). The treatise of Ludolf was based on the Gospels. It was printed many times and translated into various languages. The Spanish translation, made by Franciscan friar Ambrose de Montesimo, became a classic of early modern Spanish prose. The magnificence of this edition might be partly explained by the sponsorship of Spanish royal family, Isabel of Castile and Ferdinand of Aragon, who selected Stanislaus Polonus to publish this work. The four volume edition was printed in Alcalá de HERNANDEZ in two different formats in 1502-1503. Several years later, St. Ignatius of Loyola admired and studied this translation before establishing the Society of Jesus<sup>59</sup>.

Another Spanish printer Pedro (Peter) Hagenbach also printed some incunabula by Carthusian authors<sup>60</sup>.

3. Carthusians as printers

Yves Gourdél in his elaborate article on the Carthusian Order included a brief account of the Carthusians as printers<sup>61</sup> and presented a list of Carthusian-owned printing presses. However, one can find some information on this question also in nineteenth-century publications. Falk, in his study entitled Die Druckkunst im Dienste der Kirche, zunächst in Deutschland, bis zum Jahre 1520<sup>62</sup> as well as in his short article Geistliche Drucker und geistliche Druckstätten bis 1520<sup>63</sup>, distinguished between religious printers and printing presses owned by religious communities. He listed the printers sponsored by the Carthusians in Germany (Cologne, Rostock, and Strasbourg) and printing presses owned by the Carthusians: Parma, Ferrara, Lyons, Namur, Venice, and Gripsholm.

The first contact between Carthusians and early printers dates, as we have seen, from the seventies of the fifteenth century, but in this same period the Carthusians also founded their own printing presses.

It is believed that the first printing press possessed by a Carthusian community was established in the charterhouse of Parma, where the monks produced ("impressere fratres opus hoc Cartusie Parme quibus Augustinus genere tunc praeftitit ortus") in 1477 their first and only book "Historia flendae Crucis"<sup>64</sup>. The community in Strasbourg, which possessed the autographs of Ludolph of Saxony's Vita Christi, printed it in 1474 with the assistance of Heinrich Eggestein (Conventus Cartusiensis prope Argentinam)<sup>65</sup>. book was printed in Lyons in 1485 "cura et expensis Majoris Carthusiae typis et iconibus exquisitissimis excudebat Theobaldus Ancelin"<sup>66</sup>.

One of the most famous printing presses owned by the Carthusians was that of the charterhouse Domus Pacis Mariae (Mariefred) in Gripsholm in Sweden. The beginnings of the Scandinavian foundation were closely linked with the North-German Carthusian house in Rostock – Domus Legis Mariae – and the university in that city. Among the students of the famous Hansa university one can find Johannes Mathei, writer, translator and for many years confessor general in the Bridgettine monastery of Vadstena, as well as Jacob Ulfsson, who later became Bishop of Uppsala and supported constantly the Swedish Carthusian foundation. Certainly, these prominent Church officials met the Carthusians in Rostock and established long-lasting spiritual relations with them.

Rostock was connected with the printing press of the Swedish charterhouse also through another person – Alanus de Rupe (Alain de la Roche)<sup>67</sup>. Born in Brittany around 1428, he entered the reformed Dominican monastery at Dinan in Brittany. Soon he was sent to Paris, where he was able to complete his education, and finally, in 1461, began lecturing on Peter Lombard's Sententiae. Alanus left Paris in 1464 and travelled through the Netherlands, preaching and promoting the cult of Virgin Mary, in particular the rosary devotion. He was also responsible for establishing the Brotherhood of the Psalter of Mary, dedicated to the so-called Hours of Our Lady, recited in churches or privately. Alanus arrived in 1470 in Rostock, where he lectured in the St. John's Dominican convent, again on the Lombard's Sententiae. Five years later he returned to the Netherlands and died shortly afterwards on 8 September 1475<sup>68</sup>. None of his literary or devotional works, almost entirely dedicated to the cult of the Virgin Mary, were published in his lifetime. Some of his sermons were printed by the Brethren of Common Life in Rostock in 1476<sup>69</sup>. As late as 1484 Gerard Leeu edited his Psalterium beatae Mariae virginis and Quodlibet de veritate fraternitatis rosarii sancti psalterii beatae Mariae virginis. The German translation entitled De psalterio beatae mariae virginis. Unser lieben Frauwen Psalter, came out in 1492 at Ulm. But certainly the most popular edition of Alanus works appeared in 1498 in Mariefred.

The first Carthusian monks came to Sweden in 1484-1485. Nicolas Lange was absolved from the priorate of Domus Paradisi Mariae in order to negotiate and supervise the new Swedish foundation<sup>70</sup>. Soon, he was supported by other monks from that house: Nicolas de Flensburg, Andreas Brettschneider, Herman Seidel, and Johan Waldhauer. After the initial phase 1491-1493, Fikke Dyssijn, Johan Sanderi and two lay brothers Arendt and Kersten from the charterhouse Domus Legis Mariae in Rostock arrived at Gripsholm to support the efforts of their Pomeranian confratres<sup>71</sup>. While the monastery was still under construction, the monks organized a small printing press and edited in 1498 Alanus de Rupe's De dignitate et utilitate psalterii beatae Mariae virginis, the most representative collection of his works. Among them one can find a sermon dedicated to the Dominicans in Rostock, entitled Scala religionis<sup>72</sup>. It is worthy of notice that the Carthusians printed this book before their church was consecrated, which took place as late as 15 February 1504. The cost of the printing was covered by Ingeborg Åkesdotter Tott Toot, wife of Sten Sture, the two founders of the Swedish charterhouse. She also asked the monks to send off copies of Alanus' work to monasteries in Sweden as well as abroad. At least 28 copies of this edition are extant in various libraries<sup>73</sup>. The book became quite popular, for another edition came out in Lübeck in 1506. This time the cost of the print-run was defrayed by Svante Sture.

The further development of the Carthusian community in Sweden was disturbed by the Protestant Reformation. The charterhouse, founded as the last Catholic monastery in Sweden, was suppressed first of all. Gustav Vasa, king of Sweden, arrived at Gripsholm in person on 9 December 1525 and declared the suppression of the Carthusian community. Thus the printing press was closed down.

The history of the Carthusian press in Rostock is connected with a novice monk, Ludwig Dietz. He spent only three months among the Carthusians in 1512-1513; however, he was allowed to act as a printer. As it was stated in one of his prints, the press was located in cell L, probably the one which Ludwig himself inhabited<sup>74</sup>. Dietz produced one-page devotional prints, which were very popular at that time. Three of his prints have survived: De Rock Jhesu Christi vnser heren, the report of a miracle that occurred in Trier in 1512; Dat moelen leeth, a poem with a fine drawing of the transsubstantiation that was present in many shrines in the Hansa area; and Van Marien eyen suuerlyk ledrllyn, another poem on the Virgin Mary. All his prints were published in Northern German dialect. Dietz left the Carthusian community, but he still preserved his interest in printing religious texts. Dietz published around 1517 an invitation to join the Rosary Brotherhood in Northern German dialect, entitled "Vormanynghe vnde Toherdige, eyne korte, aller cristlövigenmynschen to haende yn de Bröderschop Marien Rosenkrantz"<sup>75</sup> and in 1518 Alanus de Rupe's Psalter der Yunkfrouwen Marien, a German translation, prepared by Joachim Lagebusch, a priest from Rügenwalde (Darfowo)<sup>76</sup>.

Liturgical Incunabula

Carthusian liturgical services were highly reputed over the centuries for their fervour. The Order managed to sponsor the publishing of their Breviarium ordinis Carthusiensis in Venice, one of the most significant towns in the history of printing in Italy, by the publishing house of Andreas Thoresanus on 5 May 1491. They soon reedited their Breviarium ordinis Carthusiensis, again in Venice, with the publishing house of Theodor de Ragazonibus in 1500. Another liturgical book, Diurnale Cartusianum, was also published in Venice by Boneto Locatello ca. 1495, and reedited by Jean Carant in Périgueux ca. 1498<sup>77</sup>. A much esteemed edition of the Missale Cartusiense was printed by Peter Drach in Speyer before 1496. The monks saw to it that the books needed for their monastic liturgical life were printed or reissued periodically<sup>78</sup>, e.g. Breviarium (Venice 1501, Pavia 1506, Lyons 1516, Paris 1521, Paris 1522, Venice 1523, Paris 1525, Paris 1532, Paris 1551, Pavia 1560, Lyons 1587, Lyons 1642, Lyons 1643, Correrie 1717, Grenoble 1757); Diurnale (Paris 1514, Paris 1520, Paris 1613, Lyons 1620, Paris 1623, Correrie 1693, Correrie 1714, Correrie 1724, Correrie 1750); Missale (Ferrara 1503, Venice 1509, Paris 1516, Lyons 1517, Paris 1520, Paris 1539, Paris 1541, Lyons 1580, Milan 1596, Paris 1603, Lyons 1627, Lyons 1670, Lyons 1713, Correrie 1719, Grenoble 1771, Grenoble 1883); Graduale (Paris 1578, Lyons 1674, Montreuil-sur-Mer 1878, 1897); Antiphonale (Pavia 1612; Correrie 1689; Montreuil-sur-Mer 1876 (=Antiphonale nocturnum), Montreuil-sur-Mer 1878 (=Antiphonale diurnum), Montreuil-sur-Mer 1881 (=Antiphonale abbreviatum); Psalterium (Strasbourg 1519, Cologne 1535, Lyons 1673, Correrie 1701, Montreuil-sur-Mer 1875); as well as Hymnale (Lyons 1588, Correrie 1701; Montreuil-sur-Mer 1896).

Modern printing presses

Up to the end of sixteenth century the Carthusians established ca. 15 printing presses or cooperated with private printers, who had their own presses. Among the printing presses established by the monks in their monasteries in the second half of the fifteenth century and first half of sixteenth century, only the Cologne enterprise survived for a longer time, the rest existed briefly for a few years. In the seventeenth century the Carthusians established printing presses in Tournai in 1606, at La Grande Chartreuse ca. 1678, and at La Correrie in 1680. At the end of the nineteenth century the silent monks installed a modern printing press in the charterhouse Notre Dame de Près at Montreuil-sur-Mer, which in 1901 was moved to Tournai and in 1913 to Parkminster.

5. Incunabula in Carthusian libraries.

Studies on incunabula collections in Carthusian libraries seem to be rather neglected compared with the number of publications on Carthusian manuscripts. Richard Bruce Marks, Heinrich Schreiber and Johan Peter Gumbert in their magnificent works on the medieval libraries excluded the incunabula and paid attention only to the manuscripts! As a consequence of this attitude, we can say much more about the manuscripts owned by the Carthusians than about the incunabula. Though the losses have been substantial, Carthusian library collections from suppressed charterhouses have often survived till the present time in various states, - sometimes more manuscripts are preserved than incunabula.

At least six incunabula from the charterhouse Monnikhuizen in Arnhem have survived till now. They are housed in the City Library. The Carthusians possessed copies of Biblia cum glossa ordinaria Walafridi Strabonis printed in 1498, Casus summarii decretalium Sexti et Clementinarum of Michael de Dalen, printed in 1485, Decretales cum glossa Bernardi Parmensi et Lucumbrationibus Hieronymi Clarii of Pope Gregory IX, printed in 1494, Justinianus, Institutiones with glossa ordinaria Francisci Accursii, edited in 1486, Meditationes vitae Christi, vol. I-II of Ludolf of Saxony, printed in 1483, as well as Super V librum Decretalium cum repertorio Alphonsi Diaz de Montalvo of Nicolaus de Tudeschis, printed in 1487-1488. (Bemmel, 1985).

6. Incunabula of Carthusian authors in non-Carthusian libraries.

Some of the treatises written by Carthusian monks gained, as we have seen, certain attention and even fame among non-Carthusian audiences, especially works of Werner Rolewinck and Ludolf of Saxony. However, one may ask, whether the books were distributed by the printers themselves, or, presumably, the Carthusians themselves engaged in promoting such literature?

Silesia, the territory located between the medieval kingdoms of Poland and Bohemia, belonged to the most highly developed in economic and cultural terms. Rich, urbanized with a good network of commercial routes, however politically divided, Silesia was a province with clearly defined borders. Ludwig II, prince of Liegnitz (Legnica) and Brieg (Brzeg), founded in 1423-1424 a charterhouse in the main city of his principality. Soon, the construction of the new monastery was terminated. After over hundred years the charterhouse was suppressed and its buildings destroyed in the forties of the sixteenth century by Prince Friedrich II. Nowadays the most significant surviving witness to this late medieval foundation is the collection of ca. 30 manuscripts and 58 incunabula<sup>79</sup>. But how many incunabula of Carthusian authors can one trace in other ecclesiastical libraries in Silesia?

The Cistercians from the abbey in Kamieniec Zabkowicki (Kammenz) possessed a substantial library that was destroyed by a great fire in 1426. Among the incunabula one can find Werner Rolewink's Libellus de regimine rusticorum<sup>80</sup>, printed in Cologne by Bartolomaeus de Unkel ca. 1484. The Cistercians from the abbey in Krzeszów (Grüssau) possessed Werner Rolewink's Fasciculus temporum<sup>81</sup>, printed in Cologne by Heinrich Quentell in 1480. This book used to belong to John IV Roth, bishop of Wrocław, then it passed to Peter Jenkwicz, canon of the Wrocław cathedral chapter (Liber Petri Jenkwicz), who offered it to the library of the Wrocław cathedral (Ecclesiae cathedralis Wratislaviensis). Finally, the book was given the Cistercians in Krzeszów. One can find many Latin annotations to the text in dorso, dating from the fifteenth century.

The Regular Canons in Wrocław (Breslau-Sandinsel) owned the work of Denys the Carthusian Specula omnis status humanae vitae<sup>82</sup>, printed in Nürnberg by Peter Wagner in 1495. Within the wooden cover of this book there were room to hide precious objects. Besides, the Canons possessed two copies of Lavacrum conscientiae by Jacob de Gruytrode. The first copy, published in Leipzig by Gregor Boettiger ca. 1495<sup>83</sup>, belonged to Daniel Perc, vicar of the Cathedral church in Wrocław (Breslau) in 1578-1583, who offered it to the Regular Canons. The second copy was also donated to the Canons in the sixteenth century.

The Regular Canons in Zagan (Sagan) possessed the juridical work of Henry de Piro Super Institutiones, printed by Conrad Winters de Homborch

ca. 1482<sup>84</sup>. The Canons owned also a second incunabula, Expositio in Psalterium by Ludolf of Saxony, published together with the Psalmi poenitentiales of Francesco Petrarca, printed in Speyer by Peter Drach in 1491<sup>85</sup>.

The Dominican convent in Wrocław, one of the oldest in the Order, possessed the Viola animae of Peter Dorland, printed in 1499<sup>86</sup>, as well as the Vita Jesu Christi by Ludolf of Saxony<sup>87</sup>, printed by Anton Koberger in Nürnberg in 1478. The second book contains hand-painted initials in gold and various colours. The Franciscans in Nysa Kłodzka (Neisse) also possessed this work, published in 1483, however, by the same printer<sup>88</sup>. They also owned Jacob de Paradiso De arte bene vivendi et bene moriendi (Leipzig, Gregorius Böttiger, ca. 1492)<sup>89</sup> and Werner Rolewinck's Fasciculus temporum (Cologne, Henricus Quentell, 1479)<sup>90</sup>. The Observant Franciscans in Głogów (Glogau) possessed Jacob de Gruytrode Lavacrum conscientiae (Leipzig, Wolfgangus Stoeckel, 3 October 1497)<sup>91</sup>.

The monastery of the Canons of the Holy Sepulchre was founded by Prince Boleslaw Wysoki in 1190. Soon the Canons built a hospital in 1226-1231, which was burnt down during the great fire of the town in 1525. The Canons possessed a rich library and an important collection of paintings. Among the incunabula that once belonged to the Canons of the Holy Sepulchre one can find a work of Dioynisius Cartusianus, Specula omnis status humanae vitae, edited by Peter Danhauser and Peter Wagner in Nürnberg on 28 January 1495<sup>92</sup>, and Ludolf of Saxony's Expositio in Psalterium, printed in Speyer by Peter Drach, after 1 January 1491<sup>93</sup>.

Crusaders of the Red Star possessed Werner Rolewinck's Fasciculus temporum, printed in Cologne in 1476 by Konrad Winters de Homborch, as it was stated in provenance note of 1722: Bibliothecae Hospitalis S. Matthiae Vratislaviae, as well as the ex-libris of J.G.G. Büsching, Aus der Bibliothek des St. Mathias-Stiftes zu Breslau.<sup>94</sup>

In the library of the collegiate church in Głogów we can find a copy of Werner Rolewinck's Fasciculus temporum, offered by master Mathaeus Hammer in 1494<sup>95</sup>, as well as Joannes Carthusiensis Nosce te ipsum, printed in Venice by Nicolaus Jenson on 28 June 1480<sup>96</sup>. The canons of the collegiate church in Nysa (Neisse) also possessed a copy of Werner Rolewinck's Fasciculus temporum<sup>97</sup>. Around 40 incunabula by Carthusian authors, which were once possessed by various ecclesiastical communities in Silesia, are still extant. Unfortunately, the archives of the charterhouse in Legnica (Liegnitz) were almost totally destroyed. Neither a chronicle nor a Liber beneficiorum has survived. It is impossible to reconstruct even the list of the monasteries that the Carthusians admitted to the privilege of confraternitas. However, the number of incunabula by Carthusian authors from the territory of medieval Silesia, compared to those of other monastic figures, e.g. Bernard of Clairvaux, is significantly high.

7. Conclusion

The silent monks did not commit themselves to the new printing art wholeheartedly, trying rather to preserve their "medieval" standards of life. However, from the seventies of the fifteenth century onwards they allowed professional printers to publish their treatises and promoted in this way the monastic impact on religious and social life. Some of the works written by Carthusian monks became the first real "best-sellers" of early modern times. It is noteworthy that in Werner Rolewinck's lifetime as many as ca. 25 editions of his Fasciculus temporum came out, and by 1525 25 further editions were printed. This makes altogether ca. 100.000 copies of this work up to 1525<sup>98</sup>.

The situation changed somewhat in the period of the Catholic Counter-Reformation in the middle of the sixteenth century, when the charterhouse of Cologne and its printing press became one of the most active and influential centres of Catholic publication in Germany<sup>99</sup>. During the following two centuries the French Carthusians dedicated themselves to the publication of books. The magnificent art of copying manuscripts was not neglected by the Carthusians in the second half of the 15th and at the beginning of the 16th century, but at that time print became a firm and solid element of humanist culture.
